THE IRISH CONVENTION

NORTHERN WHIG (September 4th, 1917), says :-

"We are confident most of the delegates feel rather ashamed of the facthat in the middle of a great war, when our very existence is at stake, and when every ounce of energy should be put forth in order to destroy the enemy, they should be called upon to imitate Abbe Sieyes, and spend their time in drafting constitutions which can only find a fitting resting-place in the waste-paper basket."

AN INTERNATIONAL MAGNA CHARTA

(Vide "English Review," August.)

NORTHERN WHIG (August 7th, 1917), writes as follows :-

"An article which will command attention, headed 'War and Reconstruction pleads for an International Magna Charta formed by the wise men and elders of the peoples, the greatest intellects in the Humanities and Science, who would collaborate in the preparation of a scheme based upon justice and a right consideration for the welfare of the part in its relation to the whole. Such a charter, it is contended, might drive conviction into the soul of every German that he is fighting against justice, against civilisation and against God. Judging by the history of the past three years, it may, however, be doubted whether German democracy, despite the recent rumbles, is yet in the frame of mind which would make it responsive to such lofty ideals."

THE RIGHT REV. THE BISHOP OF ROCHESTER, says :- *

.... But if such an International League of Justice could be set on foot it would be manifestly of extreme value for the future peace of the world."

ISRAEL ZANGWILL, the Worldfamous Jewish Author, says :-

"As one who always maintained that Reason and Love must be brought to bear upon the world situation, and that these are the only things that have never been applied by politicians, I welcome the splen-did article demanding an 'International Magna Charta.

THE RIGHT HON. AMEER ALL a great leader of the Indian

Mahommedans, says :-"I have read it (An International Magna Charta) with much interest and profit, and have no doubt your suggestion will make the readers of the 'English Review' give serious consideration to the momentous pro-blem that faces the Empire."

The Threat to Petrograd.

The Value of the new Food Orders to the Irish people will depend altogether on the manner of their administration. The Orders are even more necessary in this country than in Great Britain, where the high cost of living is mitigated, to some extent, by the increased wages of all classes of war-workers. The very poor in Ireland have received little or no relief from war-work. We have a large middle classes of war-workers. The very poor in Ireland have received little or no relief from war-work. We have a large middle classes of living have advanced by leaps and bounds. To the castent, by the increased wages of all classes of war-workers. The very poor in Ireland have received little or no relies from war-work. We have a large middle class whose incomes have decreased, raine that the Russian Fleet has increased, since the war began, while taxation and the cost of living have a maintained that the Russian Fleet has increased, since the war began, while taxation and the cost of living have and the cost of living have a maintained that the Russian Fleet has without the proposed of constitution, as we said in a former article, we have no fault to find. It includes men who are familiar with every detail of the Irish food problem and may be trusted to give equal justice to consumer, producer, and retailer. The six large cities will have local food committees, whose functions, we presume, will be identical with those of the local food committees in Great Britain. We are still very much in the dark, however, about the Central Committee's arrangements for the fixing and enforcement of retail prices in the country parts of Ireland. We gather that these are to have no local committees: apparently, the whole scheme of supervision is to be administered from Dublin, with the assistance of the Royal Irish Constabulary. We have the utmost faith in the lintelligence and adaptability of that admirable Force, but obviously there are some things which it cannot do. It cannot grapple with the delicate variations of legitimate prices in different districts, and it cannot stand, a permanent Cerberus, beside the counter of every village shop in Ireland.

This matter is important, for everybody who knows Ireland knows that, even if protects them, may endure exactions and dishonesties in silence because they will not dare to give offence. For such cases the Royal Irish Constabulary, however vigilant it may be, will provide no remedy. It is manifest that the question of securing fair play for the Food Orders in country districts must engage the early attention of the Irish Food Control Committee. We may assume, without being over-cynical, that, until some scheme is enforced for the fixing of retail prices, the Food Controller's maximum will be also the minimum in many parts of the country. It is very desirable, however, that, in the meanwhile, the humblest Irish peasant should have no excuse for

It is very desirable, however, that, in the meanwhile, the humblest Irish peasant should have no excuse for ignorance of the fact that the maximum price is not necessarily the only price. The Control Committee should advise the Food Controller to compel retailers—especially in country districts—to give all necessary information to their customers. All prices should be exhibited by compulsion both in shop-windows and inside the on both in shop-windows and inside the remain in care of them in the workhouse ful shops, with a statement that maximum prices are not necessarily minimum prices.

(FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.)

Orders can only be guaranteed if the whole Irish people forms itself into a National Vigilance Committee. Every one of us, whatever his wealth or station in life, owes this duty to the poor of Ireland. In this matter educated Irishwomen have an opportunity of doing a very great service to their country. House-keeping is, after all, woman's main business, and Lord Rhondda's scheme is a question of house-keeping in excessis. The ordinary woman knows more about food prices than the most highly cultivated man can ever hope to know, and is quicker than Sherlock Holmes to detect attempts to cheat her out of full value for her money. For this reason we hope that women inspectors.

BELFAST, Wednesday.

Belfast sittings of the language, while their compatitors were chartering away in their own language. While their compativots were dropping their bombs overhead. It is suggested that an examination of the shelterers on such occasions by the police might lead to some useful discoveries.

If the official report of the casualties is anything like correct, the amount of damage done is astonishingly small, and shows the advantage of people remaining under cover. Considering the length of time during which the raiders were over London, and the number of bombs that they dropped, most of us would hardly have been surprised by a death-roll five or six times as great. There is very natural disappointment at the fact that the raiders National Vigilance Committee. Every one Holmes to detect attempts to cheat her out of full value for her money. For this reason we hope that women inspectors will be a cardinal feature of the Irish Committee's plan for the enforcement of the Food Orders. The wages of a whole battalion of such women inspectors would battalion of such women inspectors would soon come hack to the City all. The Boman Catholic Bishops motored up to the city a few minutes before 11 o'clock, and nearly all the delegates had arrived before this hour.

oon come back to the Irish taxpayer as forcement of the maximum prices. Apart, however, from the official employment of women, there is vast scope under the new Orders for the beneficent activities of women in every part of Ireland. We suppose that no considerable village in the country is now without a branch of the Red Cross Society, or the United Irishwomen, or the Women's National Health Association: we do not care what the specific object may be, so long as if has brought half a dozen educated women into association for a common purpose. If everywhere, throughout Ireland, women of this class would form themselves into committees in order to protect the rights of mittees in order to protect the rights of mittees in order to protect the rights of the following membras were present:—The Duke of Abercorn, R. They would be familiar with local conditions; they would soon have all the regulations and all the maximum prices at their fingers' ends; they would be themselves—a very practical consideration—among the best customers of the local shopkeepers. They would form, in fact, a very useful, if quite unofficial, substitute for the local food committees of Great Britain.

LONDON CORRESPONDENCE.

onsumer in the cities sees a daily newspaper and appreciates the measures which the State has taken for his protection. In the next place, he has a large area of choice between competing retailers, all of whom do their business in a certain glare of publicity. The rural mind is still in a state of confusion about the new Orders, and the rural consumers' choice of shops is often severely limited. Moreover, large classes of country purchasers are under a variety of obligations to local shopkeepers—the "gombeen man" is still very far from dead—and, unless the State protects them, may endure exactions and barriers erected by the police.

As has been noticed in previous raids, the foreign colony seems to have been more alarmed than the native population. The Pall Mall Gasette is informed that, of the

Mr. Joynson-Hicks, although a great Mr. Joynson-Hicks, although a great authority on theoretical aeronautics, must, I think, have given insufficient consideration to the practical difficulties in the way. If it is possible to drive off night-flying aircraft with such certainty as he suggests, how comes it that the Germans are unable to prevent the almost nightly attacks of the R.N.A.S. on Zeebrugge and other places on the Belgian coast? Yet it is extremely rare to hear of even one of our machines being lost in their nocturnal expeditions, and, as the Daily Graphic remarks, "the enamy is receiving far more bombs from the air than he is discharging here."

MUNICIPAL ART GALLERY.

A large decorative picture, "The Landing of St. Patrick in Ireland," by Mr. F. Cayley Robinson, has recently arrived at the Gallery, and is now hung in the Entrance Hall. This interesting work was painted specially for the Dublin Municipal Gallery to the order of the late Sir Hugh Lane, and is the last of his gifts to the collection. It was completed by the artist early in the present year, and was hung in the Summer Exhibition of the New English Art Club. Other recent acquisitions which are now on view include a fine work by Ingres, portrait of Vincent Léon Pallière; "At the Seaside," by E. Boudin; "Sheep Dipping," by James Ward, R.A.; two large decorations by Mr. Walter Bayes and Mr. Donald MacLaren; "A Boy in Brown," by Mr. Augustus John; "A Winter Landscape," by James Charles; two studies by E. J. Gregory, R.A.; two pictures by Mr. Jack B. Yeats, R.H.A., and two lithographs by Mr. C. R. W. Nevinson. Amongst the recent visitors to the Gallery was

THE PURCHASE OF BASIC SLAG.

The extension of the area under tillage makes it essential that farmers should provide themeselves with increased supplies of artificial manures. Phosphatic manures especially will be in great demand. The supply was short last year, and the same difficulty will be experienced in the spring of 1918. The quantity of superphosphato available will be restricted, and in the absence of adequate supplies of this fertiliser, farmers must rely upon the only effective substitute—vix. basic elag.

In numerous trials made by the Department of Agriculture, basic slag has proved a first class fertiliser for all crops, especially grass and roots. Farmers will this year be advised to with the supply of human food by taking.

SIR.—In the Killarnev district the rainfall was 12.71 inches during the past August. With us in latter years August has almost invariably been a wet month, and, to try to remedy this, I have for years past, when necessary, dried the sheaves of corn on wires in the tillage fields. This is, of course, a troublesome, and possibly wasteful, plan; but it was the only way of saving much of the grain during this past month. It enabled me to harvest twenty across of barley and oats, and to finish off my threshing on September lat. The grain is surprisingly good in colour.—Yours, etc.

Morgan O'Connell.
